CHICAGO'S HORROR.

Awful Holocaust at the World's Fair Grounds.

Chicago, June 11.—The fear that has existed for months in the mind of nearly every citizen of Chicago, a fear that none dare utter to his fellows, but that all felt found realization in a frightful holocaust at the world's fair that claimed nearly two score of victims and for a time threatened the destruction of the entire white city.

The structure that burned yesterday was, by comparison, one of the smallest buildings of the fair. It was the cold storage warehouse and skating rink, and was not the property of the exposition. It was a concession and exhibit of the Hercules iron works and ice and refrigerating machine manufacturers.

The fire was not generally observed until about 1:15 p. m., and within thirty minutes the great loss of life oe

About twenty-five firemen were on the cupola fighting the flames when the fire broke of the state of the The fire was not generally observed until about 1:15 p. m., and within thirty minutes the great loss of life occurred. At the first signal the firemen rushed up the hyge shaft surrounding the smoke stack and when at the summit began preparations to fight the flames, which had first appeared at this point. Before hose could be coupled a cry of horror from the crowd below caused the firemen to look down, and the whole shaft below was found to be encircled in flame. Instantly every man realized his danger, but there were few to find an avenue for escape. One man suddenly grasped a rop, or hose, and half sliding, half falling, reached the roof, ninety feet below, in a bruised and burned condition, but still alive.

By this time the crowd below had become wild with excitement and weeping women and frenzied men rushed hither and thither, wringing their hands in anguish over their inability to render aid. Suddenly one of the firemen was seen preparing to jump and every one was turned upward. Ho gave a quick, spasmodic leap, and turned over and over half a dozen times before he struck the roof ninety feet below. To the spectators he seemed a minute falling this distance and when

The sensation of the day was the speech of Gov. Waite. Among other things he asid:

"If the money power shall attempt to sustain its naurpation by the strong hand of the law we will meet that issue when it is forced upon us, for it is better inficially that blood should flow to the horses' bridles rather than our national liberties be destroyed."

He said also: "If it is true that the United States is unable to earry out its governmental policy without the dictation or consent of foreign powers: if we are a province of European monarchies, then we need another revolution, another appeal to arms, and we have won that battle. If war is forced upon us we will send to Halifax a far greater army of 'British tories' according to our population than our forefathers sent there after the revolutionary war."

Suppose gold should be treated as silver has been, and demonstized, and its mint colonge value taken away, what does Mr. Morton suppose would be the value of gold? It would then be simply a commodity, the price of which would be fixed by demand and supply for use otherwise than as money; and with a supply about double the requirements for such uses, does not Mr. Morton see that it would inevitably decline in value? Would not the same law prevail as in the case of all other commodities? Does he not see that the reason why his twenty-dollar gold piece will have the same ralue after obliteration of the government stamp is because the holder knows he can have it recoined at the mint valuation which was expressed on its face?
